⑪

January 7th, 2021

Sometimes the most seemingly innocent act can have the most unexpected but impactful result... in the most unexpected places.

Sit back for a bit and watch the following clip [2:21] (just click on the pic)

14 wolves created significant ecological transformation in an area slightly smaller than Cape Breton (population 137,000). They showcased the interconnectivity, the interdependency, the delicate balance teetering on stability that exists in our world. Without intention they sparked growth and regeneration. They created monumental impact.

We as humans have the ability to act with intention. We are able to make choices with an inclining of the outcome beforehand.

We can choose how to act or how to respond. We can choose our interactions.

Do you remember the joys of how nature responded 8 months ago when we "stayed the blazes home"? (For a little recap, click on the picture [1:27])

Llandudno, Wales

T·H·E O·N·E W·I·T·H T·H·E P·A·N·D·E·M·I·C

We play such an integral part in our survival as individuals, as a family/ community and as a planet. We've had the good fortune of witnessing this and we now sit at a point where we can make choices that will significantly impact and direct our course. Our own personal course, the course of our communities and the trajectory of our planet. We have been gifted the chance for a bit of a "redo"... a Mulligan, in so many areas of our lives. What will we do?

What choices will we make?
How will we use this opportunity?
How do we plan to impact these things?

Today's Task.

Think about your life.
Your interactions. The things you do regularly. Your habits.   Your "conveniences".

How do they impact the world around you?
(Your friends and family, your community, your planet?)

We saw what 14 wolves can do, how CAN you (and your community) impact your ecosystem (your home, your neighbourhood, your city, your province)?

How WILL you choose to impact it?

Prediction: There will be a minor baby boom in 9 months, and then one day in 2033, we shall witness the rise of THE QUARANTEENS.